Overview

- AIG Travel Security rates Afghanistan as an EXTREME threat location due to significant risks posed by ongoing conflict conditions, terrorism, political and social instability, civil unrest, crime and kidnapping as well as corruption.

Afghanistan is located in central south Asia and is bordered by Pakistan, Turkmenistan, Iran, Uzbekistan, Tajikistan and China. Afghanistan continues to face increased levels of violence as of 2015 as the country attempts to handle full responsibility of its security affairs in the aftermath of the U.S. and NATO combat forces withdrawal at the end of 2014. The country has struggled with managing ongoing security threats including ongoing conflict conditions, high-level terrorist activity, political and social instability, crime and kidnapping as well as endemic corruption.

There is an EXTREME risk of terrorism stemming primarily from the Taliban – a Sunni militant group of predominantly Pashtun ethnic background – which aims to destabilize the central government and regain administrative control of Afghanistan. Taliban-associated terrorist attacks are frequent occurrences, especially in the capital, Kabul, where such attacks often target vital infrastructure, including government and military buildings, foreign embassies and the airport. The death of Mullah Omar, the founder and leader of the Taliban, has exacerbated tensions in the country. The group has drastically increased attacks since August 2015 during a turbulent transfer of leadership as the group attempts to display its power amongst supporters and in areas under their control. Several other groups have also been involved in terrorist attacks in the country, and most recently the Islamic State (IS) militant group, is reported to have established a presence and carried out attacks in the country.

A weak central government is a primary concern affecting social and political stability in the country. The central government does not have full administrative control over many provincial areas and security and military forces do not have the capacity to properly secure the entirety of the country. Although foreign investment has increased in recent years, internal political struggles, social tensions as well as continued conflict conditions continue to exacerbate security conditions. Foreign troops maintain some presence in the country; however, these play a largely advisory role as the responsibility of actually securing the country falls to the ill-equipped Afghan forces. Such elevated concerns are expected to persist throughout 2015.

The unity government of President Ashraf Ghani and Chief Executive Officer Abdullah Abdullah – formed following successful mediation after the 2014 elections, which saw widespread allegations of voter and electoral fraud – has led the country since September 2014. The government has largely quelled the internal feuds that characterized Afghan politics following the controversial 2014 elections and is attempting to work together; however, instability concerns remain and relations between Ghani and Abdullah are tenuous, and subject to deterioration. Politically motivated civil unrest is a concern in the near future as relations between Ghani and Abdullah may rapidly change and give way to political impasses.

Corruption fuels almost all security matters in the country and as such, it is a major threat to the future development and stability of the country. Corruption affects the political, security and economic development of the country. Since the 2001 U.S. military intervention and the toppling of the former Taliban regime, corruption has significantly increased and has now become deeply entrenched in everyday operations of the government and security and civil services.
